- II. Given below are some facts throwing light on why everybody has a different smell. Using this information write a dialogue between Tania and her doctor where the doctor answers Tania's queries on the same.

Police dogs can identify criminals on the basis of the smell of their bodies. This clearly proves that each one of us has a special kind of body smell. On the basis of certain experiments it has been established that twins, too, have slightly different smell and dogs with some special training can identify between the twins. But why does everyone have a particular smell?

It is believed that the smell arising out of an individual's body depends upto some extent on an oily liquid secreted by certain sweat glands in the body. But the scent is mainly the product of bacteria that feed on sweat. When a child is born, he picks up many bacteria from the mother as well as from the nurses and doctors who touch him. Their number increases as the child comes to further contact with others. The number of bacteria on the skin is more in the moist region and less on the dry region of the skin.

Within a few days of birth, many different kinds of bacteria settle down permanently on our skin. The types of bacteria may differ from person to person and these produce different types of odour in different persons. Which is why, different persons have different smell. 10
